Why

The COVID-19 pandemic has forced more and more people to alter their dining habits to include less dining out and more home cooking. While delivery is still an option with services such as DoorDash and GrubHub more people are looking at home cooked meals as an answer to a smaller budget and less dining options.

What we offer

The Pantry Inventory System is a tool to allow individuals to broaden their cooking horizons. While we all know our own homemade favorites it can get old quickly when you only know five meals to make with hamburger or maybe a couple pasta dishes.

Features

Easy Recipe Search: Our application allows the user to enter an ingredient such as chicken or peanuts and will return a list of recipes which include the specified ingredient. Its a cookbook tailored for you based on what you have available.

Reduction in expenses: Being able to cook with what you have saves users from spending money on take out or extra groceries when they can make a meal with what they have on hand.

Stress reduction: Being able to find something to cook with only items on hand will reduce users' stress in having to choose between going to the store to get the ingredients for a recipe they've made a hundred times or just eating out to avoid cooking all together.

Personal inventory: Users can add and update a personal inventory to help find recipes they can make with their currently stocked ingredients.

Large Cookbook: The pantry inventory system has over 5000 recipes users can look through by simply inputting ingredients they wish to cook with

Pantry Inventory & Recipe System

The COVID-19 pandemic has forced U.S. consumers to alter their dining habits. While Americans still use restaurant delivery services such as GrubHub and EatStreet, more than half of Americans are now eschewing dining out in favor of cooking and baking at home.
